NOW YOU KNOW

The peak period of immigration into the United States was between 1901 and 1910 when more than 8.7 million persons were admitted.

Famed Author Dies Today

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Author William Faulkner, one of the great writers of the 20th Century, died of a heart attack today in this little Mississippi town he made famous with his literary genius.

The Nobel prize-winning author passed away at 4 a.m. EDT with his wife, Estelle at his bedside. His death followed by just a little more than a year the passing of another American literary giant — Ernest Hemingway, who died July 2, 1961.

Faulkner, a bourbon-sipping Southern gentleman who frequently rode to the hounds, fell from his horse in the woods near his home about three weeks ago and had been in poor health since.

Lectured On Literature

In recent years Faulkner had spent much of his time at the University of Virginia where he was an Emily Clark Balch lecturer on American literature. He and his wife maintained a separate home in Charlottesville.

They returned last May to Oxford, a community of about 8,000 which Faulkner used as home base throughout his career.

Faulkner's works included such well-known books as "The Sound and The Fury," "Sanctuary," "The Unvanquished," and many others.

His latest novel, "The Reivers" was published this year and won wide critical acclaim.

Rooney Says He Is Now Bankrupt

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Actor Mickey Rooney, who earned an estimated $12 million during his ramboulous movie career, appeared at a bankruptcy hearing Thursday claiming he had only $500 in assets to pay off $484,914 in debts.

Despite his financial predicament, Rooney said he lived in a $75,000 home in Encino and had two servants for him and his family.

Rooney, 39, who starred in the Andy Hardy series and many other films, told bankruptcy referee Joseph Rinkind his debts included $106,686 in federal income taxes, $23,000 in back alimony to three of his four previous wives, and $20,000 in horse racing losses.

The greying and balding actor said in 1960 a corporation named Barbro Enterprises Productions Inc., was formed by four attorneys to further his career and catch up with some of his debts.

He said the corporation purchased his fifth wife and children, and pays him $1,000 a week, as well as providing for the servants.

Rooney said he was attempting to sell his life story for $75,000. He said he discussed the sale with one interested publisher and they were considering a $15,000 advance when final details are worked out.

$1,800,000 Loan For College Two Additional Dorms OK'd

Congressman Frank A. Stubblefield announced today approval of a $1,800,000 College Housing Loan to Murray State College by the Community Facilities Administration.

The loan will be used to construct two resident halls. One will house 300 men students and several student counselors and the other will house 304 women students and several house mothers.

This loan is just a part of the intensive expansion program which has been in progress for the past several months. Three men's dormitories have been constructed in recent months, with two of them now occupied. The new business administration building is almost completed and will be ready for occupancy by the fall. This building is the latest classroom building.

Work has moved forward rapidly on the new cafeteria located north of Chestnut Street — near the dormitory complex. This new cafeteria will serve students in the dormitory area and greatly reduce the one located in the student union building.

Plans call for five men's dormitories formed in a quintangle, with three of them almost complete. An eight story building is planned for the center of the quintangle which will also be used for dormitory space.

Another addition already in use is the married housing construction located on the north end of the college property at the end of Waldrop Drive. These forty units are of modernistic design and it is planned to add additional units, moving toward the college proper and parallel with Waldrop Drive.

Dr. Ralph Woods and his staff have been busy on expansion plans as they have on other phases of the college. Enrollment at the fall semester has been rising about eleven per cent each year, however last fall it was over two times this amount.

Over 3700 students were registered for the fall semester, last year. An increase of slightly over

Mightiest Nuclear Blast Is Released

NEVADA TEST SITE, Nev. (UPI) — The mightiest nuclear blast ever in the United States rose to a height of 400,000 feet today in the first known detonation of an H-bomb type device in this country.

Today's explosion, deep beneath the sandy floor of the test center, was the first in a historic set of back-to-back atomic tests.

The giant thermonuclear blast — which shot a towering spiral of dirt and sand high into the sky — came as a prelude to the first atmospheric test in the United States in nearly four years. The low altitude shot is tentatively scheduled for Saturday morning.

Should Schooling End In June, Many Continue In The Summer

By DAVID NYDICK

UPI Education Specialist — Should schooling end in June? Many educational opportunities are available during the summer months. Will your child benefit by taking part in a summer program?

Summer education has several purposes such as repeating courses, acceleration, enrichment in areas of interest, aid for slow students, and continuity for handicapped children.

Various types of programs exist. Regular courses are offered by local schools. Specialized schools for concentration on interests or specific field generally are available in many cities. Specialty summer camps serve many needs. Individual tutoring has gained popularity.

Which type of summer instruction answers your purposes? Before this can be decided, the most important consideration is the child. Children vary in ability, interest, physical condition, social development, emotional adjustment, and family needs. These variables should be considered in your decision.

The elementary program is not geared to a regular summer school. The philosophy emphasizes total development with the child as the center of instruction. Summer instruction tends to be in the areas of reading, math, cultural subjects, and recreation. In contrast, the secondary school emphasizes specific courses concerned with definite subject matter. Offerings of formal courses are increasingly available.

Many private or organizational camps offer varying degrees of instruction combined with a regular athletic program. Individual or group tutoring is available through clinics or interested teachers. These possibilities should be evaluated in relation to your expectations.

Let's take a look at the student in respect to the available services.

Which student will benefit from some type of instruction? Children with physical disabilities appear to need continuity of instruction. Lapses tend to cause retrogression. It is advisable to participate in some program which will maintain educational development. An evaluation of the child's reactions, during the regular school year, will give some indication of the advisability of a full or a limited program.

The demands of the elementary school are not always met by adequate instruction. Growing up is an important factor. Before involving the child in summer instruction, x. u. should carefully weigh the values of a relaxing and club type activities.

The structure of the secondary school program requires the successful completion of specific courses. While one or more courses may be completed in a summer, remember the possibility of strain and pressure. The student who is having difficulty should be carefully evaluated before deciding upon the extent of his program. The student who has interest and is looking for enrichment could benefit substantially.

In total, a human being is not a machine. You do not "shovel" information into the body and end up with a fully developed individual. The child is a complex who requires interest, maturation, and a variety of experiences in order to learn.

Look closely at the chances for success or failure before planning summer instruction. Summer school is not a punishment but an aid. Be realistic about your child's ability. Examine his needs as a child and as a student and you may find you have already made your decision.

Indians, Pirates Not Convinced

By TIM MORIARTY

United Press International — Don't try and sell the Cleveland Indians and the Pittsburgh Pirates that old saw about the fourth of July major league peace-setters winding up in the World Series.

They're not buying. History might be on the side of the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Los Angeles Angels because they reached the holiday milestone with half-game leads. However, the Indians and Pirates feel they're going to have a lot to say about the pennant races in the second half of the season.

The Indians climbed into a flat-footed tie with the idle Angels for the American League lead Thursday night when they nipped the Detroit Tigers, 7-6, on Don Dillard's two-out, ninth inning home run.

Scored Seventh Straight — The streaking Pirates, looking more and more like the 1960 world champions, scored their seventh straight victory by blanking the Philadelphia Phillies, 5-0, behind the six-hit pitching of Al McBean.

It's hard to predict which club faces the toughest obstacles in its pennant push. The Indians, of course, still must contend with the New York Yankees, who are only a half-game back in the American League race. And the Pirates, despite their streak, still are five games back of the Dodgers, who opened a 1 1/2 game lead over San Francisco by cuffing the Giants, 11-3, Thursday.

The Indians' latest victory over the Tigers was another squeaker that must have left Detroit manager Bob Scheffing muttering to himself: The Tigers, who dropped a pair of extra-inning games to Cleveland Wednesday, wiped out a five-run deficit to tie the score at 6-6 in the seventh inning on Rocky Colavito's third consecutive homer of the game.

Homered In Ninth — Dillard, who broke the Tigers' back with a 12th inning grand slammer in Wednesday's second game, waited until the ninth, this time before parking a 1-and-0 pitch by Ron Kline into the stands. Dillard entered the game in the fifth inning when Al Luplow suffered a pulled thigh muscle.

Before leaving, Luplow hit a two-run homer. John Romano added a three-run blast to stake the Indians to their early lead. Colavito, who now has 20 homers this season, hit his first two of the game off Pete Ramos and added another off Frank Funk.

McBean struck out five and issued only one walk in blanking the Phils for his eighth victory of the campaign. The Pirates scored all their runs off Jim Owens, who lasted only two innings. Dick Groat, who has hiked his average to .322 during the Bucs' winning streak, hit his first homer of the season to climax a three-run second inning.

Drysdale Won 15th — Don Drysdale of the Dodgers became the majors' first 15-game winner, scattering eight hits and striking out eight Giants. Among big Don's strikeout victims were Orlando Cepeda (three times) and Willie Mays (twice). Loser Mike McCormick, who lasted only five innings, gave up homers to Willie Davis, Ron Fairly, Tommy Davis and Frank Howard.

The Baltimore Orioles scored three runs in the eighth inning to down the Chicago White Sox, 5-4, in the only other game on Thursday's thin major league schedule.

Nursing Is Attracting More Men

NEW YORK (UPI) — The next time you're in a hospital, don't be surprised if a man in white shows up when you buzz for a nurse.

A woman who just completed a book about nurses reports that there are from 5,000 to 6,000 male nurses nationwide.

The number grows by about 300 each year as newly certified male nurses are graduated from schools once open only to girls.

Author Dorothy Ducas reports that a third of the nursing schools now accept male students. Her book is for young people considering a career in nursing.

In "Modern Nursing" (Walck, Inc.), Miss Ducas noted that more young men don't consider nursing because most don't realize there is a place for them in it.

"No areas of nursing are barred to men," she said. "But they are especially needed for care of men patients in hospitals, psychiatric nursing, rehabilitation ... and hospital administration."

Miss Ducas, former reporter and once public relations director for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, is a special consultant to the Surgeon General, U.S. Public Health Service, and an instructor at New York University.

CHAPTER 23

LATE in the summer of 1777, Hugh Spencer finally came to the conclusion that British seamen were members of the counterfeiting ring and that they were responsible for passing the false Continental notes into circulation.

His tedious, unending task of charting the reports of his colleagues and himself indicated that sailors stationed on some of Admiral Howe's warships were guilty. At least half of the powerful fleet was anchored in the East River, and when a pattern began to emerge from the haze, it became evident that most of the ships first appeared in the taverns, shops, and mercantile establishments that catered to naval personnel.

Hugh assigned his subordinates to new tasks immediately. August Dale became friendly with rear admirals and senior captains, Benji Flaherty spending all of his time at the establishments frequented by petty officers, and the Simpson brothers, who had visited the favorite eating and drinking haunts of the common seamen from time to time, now concentrated all of their attention on these taverns.

Hugh and Katie ate most of their meals at inns that catered to junior officers, and Hugh spent most of the daylight hours in the area too, wandering from one place of business to another.

Shop owners and tavern keepers, who had suffered a severe loss of business because of the Continental dollars because it was too difficult for them to distinguish between genuine notes and counterfeit, Hugh learned, and the other members of his unit brought him similar reports.

What puzzled him was that the bills appeared sporadically; new notes circulated for a short time, then there was a lull. But the areas occupied by the Americans were less fortunate, according to a letter written by Major Tallmadge that was smuggled into the city. The United States was being inundated with counterfeit bills, he wrote Hugh, and confidence in the money printed by the Continental Congress had dropped to a new low.

Hugh redoubled his efforts to find the men who were making the counterfeit bills, and his colleagues worked feverishly too. Katie, however, was inactive, for Hugh had refused to permit a young, unusually attractive woman to roam through the waterfront district alone. August agreed that she would be courting trouble, so she was forced to spend most of her time at the Duke of Albany Inn and sewing.

She complained bitterly that she was doing no good and should have remained at Black Ox farm, but Hugh refused to reconsider his decision, and their relations became increasingly strained.

Personal complications were forgotten on September 28, however, when news reached New York that Wash...gton had been compelled to abandon Philadelphia the previous day and that General Howe had occupied the American capital. The Tories rejoiced and held an impromptu victory parade, warships fired their cannon, and the citizens who had been praying for Washington's success remained behind the locked doors of their homes.

Hugh heard the news shortly after he and Katie finished eating their breakfast, and hurried down to the Tory newspaper offices near the Battery to see if he could glean more detailed information. The crowds were so dense that it was late morning by the time he was able to make his way back to the inn, where Katie was waiting for him in their room. She wasted no time observing ordinary civilities.

"A messenger brought you a letter," she said, handing him a small, folded sheet of parchment. "But he was taking a frightful risk coming up here, so I didn't try to question him."

Hugh broke the seal, scanned the brief communication briefly, and then buckled on his sword, which he had stored waiting in order to engage the messenger that he was harboring. "We're going to your father's suite," he said.

Katie heard the note of excitement in his voice, and snatched a look from a page.

August and Dave Simpson were alone in the sitting room. "Where are Benji and Dick?" Hugh asked.

"Down the street, watching the parade," Dave replied.

"Get them."

August was aware of Hugh's agitation too, but controlled his curiosity.

When the entire group had been assembled and the door had been bolted, Hugh took charge crisply. "Katie, pour some brandy for everyone. If we should be interrupted, it will look as though we're celebrating General Howe's victory."

His opened the letter. "I've heard from Major Tallmadge, who doesn't share our gloom. He says the fall of Philadelphia was expected; the British here are now too thin to be protected, and he predicts that we'll force the reluctant to relax within six months to a year."

August's expression was dour. "I know very little about military matters, but I think American independence is a lost cause."

"In that case," Hugh replied drily, "you're excused from taking part in our coming operation. I believe Major Tall-

EDUCATION

THE counterfeiting, Hugh said, "are officers of the British government who have been acting on direct orders from King George's ministers."

Only a few remained unperturbed, "very clever," he murmured. "Judging by the excellent techniques they've used, I'd guess that the money has been made by men who have been employed by the royal mint."

"Correct. The plates were engraved in London, and the notes are printed by experienced government workers."

Benji was bewildered. "Why would the British government print counterfeit bills? The ministers are rich men. They don't need the money."

Hugh smiled broadly. "They haven't been seeking personal profit. They've been engaging in a campaign more harmful to American liberty than all of General Howe's victories." He beckoned to August and Dave Simpson. "Their purpose has been a simple one. They've tried to create an atmosphere of despair, to induce the people of the United States to lose faith in the Continental Congress. So far they've succeeded, and they've sapped our will to fight. But we're in a position to strike back."

"That's what I like to hear," Benji said eagerly.

Hugh consulted the letter again. "Major Tallmadge writes that American privateers recently captured two small British warships, the Blacksnake and the Morning Star. Both were carrying large quantities of counterfeit money, which they intended to pass on to English agents operating behind our lines."

"That's disgraceful!" Katie said indignantly, sitting erect in her chair.

She was revealing her true sympathies, and Hugh was heartened, but this was not the time to pause for a private word with her. The notes, he went on, "are being printed right here in New York, and it's no wonder that sailors have been passing some, which they undoubtedly stole. The press is located on board the H.M.S. Phoenix."

Hugh has reason to feel wildly jealous. The story reaches a climax tomorrow.

Siblings Spat Cool Them Off

CHICAGO (UPI) — When two children have been arguing, call for a cooling-off period.

Don't try to settle the argument on the spot, says University of Illinois family life specialist Margaret Lynch.

Another solution is to separate the children and talk first with one and then the other. As you listen, be fair in your judgment, and don't let the more persuasive or more talkative child influence you unduly.
